THE HONOR THRUST UPON HIM.

Cenator Teller on His Appointment as Secretary of the Interior.

A NEW STORY OF ARTHOR'S CABINET.

How Farmer Harpster Took Down Millionare Alley-Senator Evarts as an Epicure and His Thirty Thousand in Dinners.

(Copyright 1800 by Frank G. Corpenter.) Wishisoron, August 18 .- |Special to The BRE.1-The Colorado United States senatorship will be settled within a few days. It is generally believed here that Senator Teller will succeed himself. He is by all odds the cleanest and most able man that his state has ever sent to Washington, and I am told that his only opponent of any prominence is Tabor, who has to buy all the votes he gets. Senator Teller is one of the most remarkable men in this country. He is the son of a farmer in western New York, and he has the blue blood of the Knickerboegers in his veins His ancestors came to this country from Holland in 1639, and the present generation is the first that has not been able to speak the Dutch language. His father was in ordinarily good circumstances and young Teller got good education, studied law, and went stage to Denver in 1858. Central City was then a great mining town and Teiler moved here and practiced law. He is one of the brightest lawyer. in Colorado and he has made several fortunes in his practice. He has lost as well as made and be is now a comparatively poor man. Heleft his law office in 1870 to be one of Colorado's first senators, and he left the senate for the cabinet in 1882. When Teller was a senator the millionaire, N. P. Hill, was also in the senate, and the two did not get along well together. Hill was jealous of Teller, and he was so angry with President Arthur when Teller was made secretary of the interior that he became Arthur's enemy as far as he NEVER GOT OVER HIS DISGUST at Teller's appointment and he is now oppo ing Terler's election to the senate.

The story of S mater Teller's appointment as one of President Arthur's cabinet minis ters has never been published, and the inside history of it was known only to three or four statesmen. These were the president him self, Senator Teller, John A. Logan and Don Cameron. Now Arthur is dead, Logan is dead, and Senator Teller at my request gives the story through me to the public. The truth is the place was forced upon him. I had a chat with him regarding it the other night. Saidhe: "I had not the slightest desire for the position and it was ten days after the place was offered me that I consented to accept it, and I could not well afford the expenses of a cabinet minister. My wife did not want me to take it and I refused to accept it as long as I dared. Ex-Senator Chaffee was a candidate for the place and so was Senator Logan. Don Cameron and myself were pushing him for it. One morning I was called out of the senate by the president's private secretary, Mr. Phillips, who told me that President Arthur would like me to come to the white house that night at 10 o'clock and talk with him about the appointment of a secre-tary of the interior. I supposed that he re-ferred to Mr. Chaffee's candidacy and when I saw him I again presented Mr. Chaffee's case. We were discussing the matter in a lit-tle private room which Arthur had reserved for himself in one corner of the presidential mansion. As I was going on about Senator Chaffee President Arthur said:

"There is no use of talking about Senator Chaffee's appointment. I have decided that I shall not have a man for my secretary of the interior who is not a lawyer and who is not PRESH FROM A GOOD PRACTICE.

Ex-Senator Chaffee has not the qualities that I want for my secretary of the interior." "I was rather pettied at this," Senator Teller went on, "and I referred to the fact that a number of the past sectories had not been lawyers when the president said: will tell you the elements that I want in my secretary of the interior and the kind of a man I propose to appoint. The secretary of the interior has to settle more important cases during the year than the supreme court, and he investigates twice the number of legal questions of the department of justice. Hence the man must be a good lawyer. He must have some experience with public affairs and with public men. He must come from the west, and President Arthur went on to tell me the other qualities which he wanted his secretary of the interior to pos-sess. As he went on I saw that he had some one in his mind, and I racked my brain to figure out who he was driving at. I ran over man after man from my locality, but I could find none who had the qualities he mentioned. His talk grew hazier to me as he went on and at last he concluded, leaning over and putting his hand on my knee, and saying: "Now, Senator Teller, I have decided that you come the nearest to filling these requireof any other man I knew, and I want to offer you the place."

"I was thunderstruck. I jumped to my feet and excitedly excialmed: "But I don't want it Mr. President. Iam in the senate and I can't leave it. I cannot afford it and you must not offer me the place, for I cannot accept it. Besides I am here to push the claims of Mr. Chaffee.'"

"The president begged me to sit down and talk over the matter," Senator Teller went on. "I complied with his request, though I said there was no use in talking about it, and our conversation lasted until 2 a.m. As I left I begged the president not to tell anyone he begged the president not to ten anyone he had offered me the position and reiterated my statement that I could not take it. "President Arthur replied: "I don't want you to decide tonight."

THINK OVER THE MATTER

until Thursday night and in the meantime I will say nothing to anybody about it. I replied that I would think of it, and with that I left. On Tuesday or Wednesday I called at the white house on some other business, and the president said: 'You are coming around Thursday!' 'Yes.' I replied, 'but I have nothing new to say.' nothing new to say."
"On Thursday I met my appointment and upon my again refusing, the president asked me to go and see Don Cameron at the senate and talk over the matter with him, and to tell Cameron to come and see him after he had had his conversation with me. I saw Sens-tor Cameron, and Cameron urged me by all means to take the place. He said: 'If the president will not have Chaffee you must accept the place and I am for you.' I gave Senator Cameron my reasons for not wanting it. He said: 'You cannot help yourself. You will have to take it,' and with that he left to go to the white house,"

"The next day when I came out of the senate Senator Allison met me with a sly wink tin his eye and asked me if the governor of my appoint a republican and whether he would the senate, I saw from this that the story was out, and the next there was a line in a New York newspaper saving that it New York newspaper saying that it was ru-nored that I had been offered the portfolio of the interior. This statment was telegraphed to Denver, and I got a hundred telegrams

URGING ME TO ACCEPT THE POSITION.

In the meantime Don Cameron telegraphed Chaffee, who was in Florida to come to Wash ngton, saying that while he could not have aim appointed secretary of the interior, the president would make an appointment which would be perfectly satisfactory to him. He came and he also urged me to accept the po-

In the meantime the telegrams from Coloado continued to come in. It was the first ime that a cabinet office had been offered to a man from Colorado, and the people of my tate would have considered it an honor to have a man in the president's calinet. The pressure became so great that I could not reuse it and I went to the white house and old the president that I would accept he position. I found the office a very deasant one and my relations with President Arthur were of the most deasant nature. I found that what he said s to the legal requirements of the office was rue and I den't believe there is a more im-ortant position in the appointing power of the president from a legal standpoint, than that of the secretary of the interior."

The question of the wool tariff has brought one of the most remarkable farmers in the United States to Washington. This is David Harpster of northern Ohio. He has thousands of sheep on the western reserve and he is one of the millionaire sheep rejects of the is one of the millionaire sheep raisers of the country. He has large estates scattered over other parts of the union and to look at him you would not suppose him him to be worth a dollar. He is about five feet four inches high, is as broad as he is long and has a round cannon ball head, pasted down upon a pair of broad fat shoulders. His roly poly form is clad in rough coals which might have been put together by his wife and a big derby hat es well down towards his ears and shades his fut florid face. Harpster is a great friend of Senator Sherman. He was sitfriend of Senator Sherman. He was sitting the other day in Senator Sherman's committee room when John B. Alley, the excongressman from Massachusetts who was se promine at in the days of the Credit Mobilier senafal, came in. Alley in a millionaire. He is proud of his riches and he is, I am told, a little inclined to pose. When he entered Senator Sherman's room Mr. Sherman introduced him to Dave Harpster, saying, "Mr. Alley, I want to make you acquainted with one of our representative farmers, Mr. Harpster."

acquainted with one of our representative farmers, Mr. Harpster."
"Ab, indeed!" replied Alley, as he shook hands. "You are a farmer, are you! I am always glad to meet farmers, for I am

"You have," muttered out Harpster, "and "It is in such a county," said Alley, naming the county, "in the central part of Texas."
"Indeed," replied Mr. Harpster. "It must be good land, for I own the whole county next

This surprised Alley and took the wind out of his sails. He said little more about his farms, but his actions showed that his respect for Mr. David Harpster, the Ohio farmspect for Mr. David thirpster, the Omo larmer, had perceptibly risen.

Speaking of Alley recalls a story which I heard lately of a dinner, which he is said to have given at Washington, and which may be true and may be not. The truth, however, does not hurt the story. It seems that at his dinner Alley had a number of prominent statesman, among whom were Senator Evarts and other leading men of the land. As soon as they had cotten through the soup, Mr. Alley begin to tell stories, in all of which Mr. Alley was the here. These stories ran Mr. Alley was the here. These stories run clear back to the days before the war. The fish, for instance, reminded Mr. Alley of an etant conference he had had with Presi dent Buchman, and he describes graphically what Buchman had said to Alley, and what Alley had advised Buchman. The first en-tree brought in the story of Lincoln, and in-cidentally Mr. Alley had, so it seemed, saved the country and the president himself. The game was eaten under a well told tale of how Alley had helped Johnson and Grant, and so it went on. At last when the Roman punch vas being served, and the faces of the guests had grown rosy with the choice old wines with which table was furnished, wines with which table was furnished, Alley happened to catch the twinkling eye of Senator Evarts. He was telling one of his most remarkable adventures at the time and he took Evarts' smile for interest and applause. He called upon him to make a response to something he had said and asked him if he did not remember some incidents in connection with it. "I do not," replied the eagle faced senator from New York, as he stretched his long six feet to his full height and threw the heavy white damask napkin on the table beside his plate, "but Mr. Alley's story reminds me of one of the most remark. able anecdotes that Truth has ever told. It happened several hundred years ago. This broad continent on which we stand was then unknown and the savage reigned supreme without knowledge and fear of the white man. At this time a bold man with his faithful friend started out on a ship with a com-pany of brave sailors to discover a passage o the far east. It was Columbus. Senator Evarts went on to describe in his four hundred word sentences that wonderful coyage, and at every other line he referred to the faithful friend who upheld Columbus in all his troubles.

HE MENTIONED NO NAME, however, until the last, and then in describing the mutiny which was about to break forth just as Columbus reached America, he said: "It was a terrible time. A day or two more and Columbus knew that he could hold his men no longer. Mutiny and death stared him in the face, and he counselled much with his faithful friend. he counselled much with his faithful friend as to the situation. He arose early in the morning and with longing eyes looked out to-wards the western horzon. There was a strange softness in the air and just as the sun rose its first rays caught a line of dim blue in the far off west. Columbus gasped. He could not speak for a moment but as the sun rose and the line became more distinct he turned to his faithful friend, threw his arms around his neck and sobbed as he pointed, Thank God! Mr. Alley, we're saved. There

Speaking of Senator Evarts, there is no man in Washington who enjoys a good dinner more than he. He is one of the highest livers in Washington and notwithstanding that he is six feet tall and does not weigh more than 125 pounds, he can eat all around Philetus Sawyer who weighs 300 and has a storage so large you could roll Evarts up like a watch spring, and coil him within it watch spring, and con him within it and have room to spare. He showed in fact no sign of his epicurean tastes, and once in a while speaking in New York, a Yankee who had arrived after the meeting had begun, asked the name of the man on the platform. He was told it was Evarts. "What," said he, "you don't mean to say that that lean lit-tle thing is E-varts. Why he looks as if he

He was figuring on his expense account the other day while sitting just in front of Senator Sherman and was adding and subtracting at a great rate. He went over a long sheet of figures again and again and at last leaned back in his chair with a sigh and threw the sheet into the waste basket. Then wrapping his long legs around one another as though they were made of India rdbber, he turned around with a sigh and spoke to Sherman. Senator Sher-man said: "By the way, Mr. Evarts I no-tice you've been adding up a lot of figures. What are you working at—the national debt or Washinston real estate!"

or Washington real estate!"
"Well," replied Everts, "it's rather a question of real estate. I have just been footing up my expense account and I find I have just rented a house for $8,000 a year, and this is going to enable me to come out just even. The consequence is I am happy." FRANK G. CARPENTER.

The Bed Bug Hunter.

At a recent meeting of the San Francisco Microscopical society President Wixon exhibited a specimen of the red bedbug hunter (opsicoetus personatus) captured in San Joaquin valley. The in-sect is about three-fifths of an inch in length, and to the naked eye is of a dark brown color, but under the microscope shows black with greenish tints under Though called a bedbug hunter, this little insect devotes but a small portion of its time to hunting bedbugs. It feeds on flies and worms, and has been known when hungry to attack sleeping humanity. The bite inflicted by this insect is very painful, and in some cases so poisis as to cause death.

Dr. Le Counte said that many people bitten by this insect believe the bite to be from the spider or bedbug-as the wound produced by the insertion of the proboscis through the epidermis is much he same with all these insects.

Though not often resulting in death. the bit is always accompanied with an itching or burning sensation at first, and afterward by a hard and highly inflammatory swelling, which lasts two or three weeks and is exceedingly painful.

A FRENCHMAN I MET.

By Charles H. Cressey. (Concluded from Inst Sanday.)

CHAPTER IL. "My father was one of the French nobility," began the interesting old gentleman, and my mother a Greeian lady of high birth. They met while my father was traveling In Greece, and a year later they married, he taking her to his home in Havre. My birth was honored with a great fete at which my mother prevailed upon my father to record a pledge that he would ever do all in his power toencourage my becoming a trained and argentally of the Greek church, and to secure my marriage with a Grecian lady. Toward attaining these two ends my youthful career was shaped and guarded with a scrupulous fidelity such as only two loving parents in the happiest consonance of burning love and devotion for each other, mided by abundant weath, could mould it. At the age of sixteen they told me I had disanpointed them not a particle in my studies nor in the genuineness of my claim to the high scholastic honors which were accorded me.

"Within forty-eight hours after my graduation my father and mother took me upon a leisure tour of the world. Our travels consamed two entire years and embraced, I may say, everything that was worth seeing. I possibly need not tell you that our longest stay was at the old home city of my mother, Athens. The defleately studied pains with which she sought to interest me in some one of the truly notile daughters of that famous place, comes all back to me as a veritable dream enclouded in the incense of a mother's most passionate interest in her only child, and the darling wish of her life.

"As is perhaps seidom the case under such circumstances, I did in fact become infatuated with the daughter of my mother's most cherished friends, a gentleman and his wife who were of rank and great fortune. Now, to my memory, as then to my vision, her's was a marvellously pure type of beauty. The face was oval, the nose Grecian, lips delicately curved in a sad yet sweet expression, the chin small and rounded, the hair golden, the eyes large and gray, and out of them looked a soul and a nature so true and so pure, so spirited, so refined, so far removed from the grosser elements of earth, that one was almost led to ask, is this really the face of some living woman, or Is it the ideal of the master artist, a lovely vision pictured by genius and pecilled by art! My mother said to me 'she is tender, sweet and loving, the reverse of all that is subtle, cunning and revengeful. "Suddenly one day my father recived a message notifying him that his counsels and and his vote were needed imperatively in a complication of affairs which had arisen at home. My mother, as I afterwards learned. hesitated for hours between having him take her and me with him or leaving us and thus venturing nothing as against my scaling my infatuation for the Greek girl with a confes-sion of love and a request for her hand. It was finally concluded, however, between my parents, that the journey was to long to ventine intrusting me with the responsibility of taking my mother home, and so we all left Athens-left my infatuation no further progressed toward the culmination for which my other fairly prayed, than simply the infatuntion point.

to "OI "Of course we exchanged pledges to write to each other by every mail, but with me the affair proved one of out of sight, out of mind, after every affair he first half dozen letters had been written. "To hasten to my story's close, I will say that within a year after our return to France there were being entertained at our house none other than the object of my old infatua-tion, and her mother. At the time of their arrival I saw in that return visit simply a chance happening, and so it was in many re-whose marchal nell roses seemed more exceeding rare than any among the great assortment in my father's conservatory.

The snadowy twilight of the day which saw me press a coldly formal kiss of courteous greeting upon the hand of the Athenian matd, fell soft and rich upon the lips of my marchal nell rustic, whereon I left a dozen kisses, fired with little less than love itself.

"The dainty rustic was also marvalers by

"This dainty rustic was also marvelously beautiful. Not as to strict regularity of features or typical style, but her face, her figure, in truth her tout ensemble, possessed a fascination for methat was increased ten fold by the dulcet, limpted accents of her clear sweet voice. There was a naivete in what she said and in her manner of speaking, unsulfied by affectation, which put my heart in pawn at once. And even now in quiet moments I can hear her humming in an almost indestin-guishable voice the dashing air of a charming chansonnette, which was at that time en vogue with all the boulevardiers at Paris. There was a spice of romance and adventure in the incumbent secreey enjoined upon our meetings. The permissible and carefully arranged rendezvous at stated times, possessed a charm that never was tainted by rashness. The mischevious coquetry she subjected me to when I chanced to purchase a mare that nell of her in the presence of others added a piquancy to her many fascinations. We were macting an idyllic drama of the remanesque school, as I thought in those whilom days before sorrow came.

"I did much driving, strolling and boating with the fair foreigner, for I decided, more for my mother's sake than otherwise, to test myself fully. But I experienced no revival of the old fascination. Her's was a face loftier in point of classic beauty, innate intelligence and refinement—it was ideal as to all of that and cet study to appreciate its fore sorrow came. of that, and yet, study to appreciate its finnesse as I would and think upon the lov-ing respect I bere my mother's ambition, my father's pride, all, as I would, I could not bring myself to say to her of the Greelan blood that which surely would have acted to blight my indefinable hopes in the direction of the rose de in marechal nell, to say nothing of the lie-acting which such a step would

"Before our guests had speut a fortnight within our chaticau, I discovered that the object of my infatuation abroad had become with me exactly as was I with the littie marechal neil merchaut, though as then, so now I reflect, through no cause on my part. For during all her visit at our home my attention never went beyond the bounds of a certial civility. And, too, I will add of a cordial civility. And, too, I will add that her's were always the guarded words indicative of a fine sensibility and a consummate pride—a nature to which the words "steoping to conquer" appeared fit only for women of the street to comprehend and exemplify. Always had I read her as being deep, but never subtle.

"My parents gave a floral fete in honor of their guests. Now it happened that the little girl of the roses had, weeks before, expressed a great desire "to get a good look," as she expressed it, in upon 'a floral reception.' In the occasion in question I saw an admirable opportunity to gratify her wish.

"The evening of the truly grand affair came, and with it an engagement on my part to slip away from the brilliant throng for a few moments and conduct the little rustic through acertain arbor which I had arranged with our ground-keeper to have free from in-trusion at the hour decided upon, and the ternination of which commanded a near and per-three families. I know not why I should have common definition of these things from out my life, but your willingness to hear me to the end must pay a penalty, if tragedy has ought of gruesomness for you."

Here the relater of his life's romance laid aside the queer out the channel which he had been fondling as though twere the one sclace of his life. As he bout toward me in greater ocen fondling as though 'twore the one sclace of his life. As he bent toward me in greater of his life. As he bout toward me in greater secrecy and clutchest his knees with nervous hands I discovered a strange medicy of expressions trooping acloss his face. His eyes gleamed with a singular, an aweing brilliancy that seemed agin to that which darts from the alchemist's retort.

He proceeded in a strained whisper:

"It was 10 o'clock. The chateau was aswim with guests. My engagement with her of the marselial neil was for 10:30. She would be returning from an evening n' a neighbor's without escort. I would meet her, conduct her to the aroar points of observation. conduct her to the arrow points of observation, then take her near her home, and return to the scenes of galty.

"As I circulated amid the brilliant throng I heard several of our more intimate friends—those who tad come to be quite well acquainted with our foreign guests—comment. regarding their discovery of a very unnatural, very singular bearing on the part of mad-amolselle from Athens, or the young Athenian beauty, as some called her. I noticed the same thing and once I tried to get near enough to make some investigation as to the ground for such comment but found or thought I found her cinding me. After that I gave the matter not a second thought, con-cluding that she was not feeling well perhaps, or possibly was a triffe nervous at meeting so many new faces, and, too, has come to think of me na little less than post tively disagreeable. When the moment came for me to slip away I was only too happy to improve it as I confes, my thoughts had been elsewhere than at home, from the time the first carriages had deposited their burden of early guests at our doors.

"I found my sweet fittle sachet of curiosity awaiting me at the very sget she had promised. Leisurfy we walked toward my home, chatting, laughing, perfectly happy over the success of our trysting. Cau tiously we appropriated and entered the superbold grounds, found the keeper on the lookout for us, and passing him continued u through the arbor, the further end of which was our objective point. This arbor, having a width of lifteen feet or more, and being some three hundrest feet in length, wound about ir its course, making an another ceted view from one end to the other impossible, and its in-terior a place of almost Egyptian darkness. And now I will not passe to make an apology for the seating indiscretion in a young mat of eighteen conducting a girl of fifteen through such a place at such an hour. Suffi-cient be it for me to say that I was acting simply upon a kindly impulse to satisfy a harmless caprice, and had no thoughts but what were as pure as hers, which, God knows, were as spotless and pure as her flowers. "We had one more sharp curve to thread before arriving at that point where all the brilliant seems would be distinct before us and not thirty feet away.

"Have I told you it was the time of greatle "Have I told you it was the time of gentle summer! Yes, and the windows and doors of the place of so much joyousnes were swung wide open. The soft air of the night was heavy with the delicious of a myriad of flowers clustering in their beds everywhere the strong in their beds everywhere about the grounds, and the richlow harmony sent forth by musicians stationed within the chateau, completed the elesyian-like sem-blance of our surroundings. My little marechal neil was entranced!

"On we moved, and in another moment the end of the arbor was reached, and the daz-zling scenes of social spiendor burst full into view. As she feasted her eyes upon the pic-ture the little one impulsively clasped her hands before her and sent forth a subdued, bubbling little expression of extatle delight which seemed to come from her very sou. In her rapture over the scene she had pressed orward, ahead of me until, before citue realized, she stood further out in the flood of light than was at all discrete, considering the chance roving of so many eyes from within. Springing forward I gently drew her back. We had stood gazing from a shadowed nook where we saw unseen for several minutes when I laughingly told her I must have a kiss for my pains. Her answer was an impulsive 'yes.' As I threw my arms about her and our lips met, a feminine voice right at hand in the shadow, hissed

"O, thing most damned—most utterly be "O, thing most damned—most utterly beyond all human conception!
"Before our lips could scarcely part, a a gleam of steel flashed before our eyes—a dagger was buried to the hilt in the breast of the marcehal neal rose girl.
"O, pitying Christ! The agonized death shrick that leaped from those guileless lips must have sent a shudder through the heart of the Almighty Himself!

"The hand that clutched the dagger's hilt was that of the young Athenian weman. She-devil, specter-like, her face demonic, the steel again in the air, she hissed with a hallow laugh,

"No kiss of love for me—then death for her, and sweet welcomed death for me" and sent the steel hilt-deep into her own wretched

"A score of guests who had rushed out tore forward upon the blood-freezing scene just as the fiend incarnate fell to the earth, her hand yet clutching the we mon, and just in time to see the murdered and the murdress breath their list, for the awful steel had been unerring in its errands.

"My position in the eyes of the scores of guests as they flocked about only to reel away in sickening, unnerving horror, can but faintly be imagined. "Nature came to my rescue-I fell in a dead

When I regained consciousness I was lying upon a couch is my own room. Ere I opposed my eyes I became aware that a terrifically wild storm was raging without, full of clanging booms of volleying thunder. Dazzl-ing shots of lightning followed with such caple, blinding succession that the very reavens seemed on dre. Occurs of water were descending with such unabated rush i were descending with such unnoted rush it seemed the entire earth must surely dissolve and be washed away to nothingness.

"As I opened my eyes I found about me my mother and father, their faces lividgened drawn with terror, and with eyes fixed wide and staring upon me. There were two others in the room, our old nurse and an officer of the tark the latter regression me with a room. the law, the latter regarding me with a keen and stern waterfulness. My strength re-turned as quickly almost as it had flows. I sprang up to a sitting posture and waving science upon all, related the whole story, from the engagement to gratify story, from the engagement to gratify the little flower girl's simple wish, on through to the moment of my becoming unconcluss. I told the whole truth and only the truth."

"Scarce had I finished when the officer of the law, whose face I noticed had been gradually relaxing its stemness, turned to my ather and with a look of satisfaction such a I shall never forget, said:

"The same story exactly—in every particu-lar as the one just told us by the sister." "'The sister—whose sister?' I exclaimed.
"'Ah, my dear son, answered my father in voice almost powerless with emotion—how preciously fortunate for you, for the honor of our family. Mamsake told her sister all about her anymously told her sister all our family. Manuscate too her sessor and about her apparently harmless engagement with you before she left home:

"Yes," said the officer, now addressing me, 'and as the two-your stary and her's agree perfectly, there is no further need for me here' and so saying he withdrew. "The remainder of the story may be told briefly. To my breathlessly put in-quiries regarding what had transpired during the moments of my uncounsciousness, my father informed me that the breaking of the news to the mother of the murderess had caused her death but a few minutes later, she being a sufferer from heart disease, while the dual tragedy made of the mother of the rose girl a raving maniae.

"At the legal investigation which followed on the succeeding day, and which occupied scarce an hour, a dainty note was read before the court of inquiry. It was written upoa the family stationery of our Grecian guests. It was in the hand of her who had taken three lives and robbed a fourth of its reason. It bore date of the tragedy and was addressed to the officers of the law. It ran thus:

"'My love for — was unconquerable.

It was never to be reciprocated. I have watched and followed him and the flower girl for weeks. Tonight I shall kill her and shall kill myself.' "It was now all over-as to the investiga-"A few nights later, and while the untern pered hurricane which for days continued bellowing down with breath of anger upon our tracedy-fevered city, was relentlessly tossing, bowing and dismembering huge trees—while Jove's artillery seemed waging mination of which commanded a near and perfect view of the principal reception salon.

"This fete was given near the close of the sixth week following the arrival of our guests and was calculated particularly as a farewell in their honor.

"Twas a beautiful night early, but later on a tempest arcse—arcse as if to blow out all the stars that lit the skies, to shroud a shame which blotted broad and deep the lives of again to a readoption of the calling of a Greek shurchman. No, I never resumed my prep-arations for that profession—I drifted into arations for that profession—I drifted into foreign trading and later into diplomatic life —but I have always wern this jeweled Greek cross, a love token from my mother on the day I completed my studies for the press-hood," and the old man fondled the precious trinket with a loving pride and pressed it reverently to his lips. "You will not wonder," he concluded, absoriest deep in the spell of his thrilling past and calm present life, "when I tell you that I dwell much upon the thought of death, but,

"To me it often seems that death must be Like going on a journey very far
Across the mountain and the solemn sea
To dwell ma new hand where strangers are.
But if a friend is there we loved of old
Our eager thoughts By faster than our feet.
And when in ours their loving hands we hold
The stranger land soons full of welcome sweet."

The figure 9 in our dates will make a long stay. No man or woman now living will ever date a locument without using the figure 9. It stands in the third place in 1800, where it will remain ten years and then move up to second place to 1900. where it will rest for one hundred years.

There is another "9" which has also come to stay. It is unlike the figure 9 in our dates in the respect that it has already moved up to first place, where it will permanently romain. It is called the "No "High Arm Wheeler & Wilson Sewing Machine The "No. 9" was endorsed for first place by the experts of Europe at the Paris Exposition of 1889, where, after a severe contest with the leading machines of the world, it was awarded the only Grand Prize given to family sewing machines, all others on exhibit having received lower awards of gold medals, etc. The French Government also recognized its superiority by the decoration of Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, President of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor.

Who "No. 9" is not an old machine improved n, but as an entirely new machine, and the grand Prize at Pans was awarded it as the grandestadyance in sewing machine mechanism of the age. Those who buy it can rest assured, there rore, of having the very latest and best.
